Tape 859, Side A

Edges and Debretts (Part 1 of 5)

001 remembers sitting on the deck and seeing a fat man sitting in a deck chair sliding across the deck; then a large wave came and drenched them all with sea water

006 when they went below, they realized the porthole in one of the cabins had been broken and there was a large stream of water and glass flowing in; the partition had been bashed into the front door

011 the owners of the cabin, having left the baby in the cabin, came back to find the baby playing happily in his crib with a large chunk of glass

014 they then got stuck in the Suez Canal, causing some to speculate that the captain was drunk

018 he remembers the voyage home as one of the highlights of his life; he went out again when he was much older and took much less time

022 boats full of Italian soldiers were lined in the Suez Canal, and they would yell obscenities at them

024 at the Indian Office Library, there are a number of good books to read; they talk about the book Diary of a Pilgrim in Search of a Picturesque after the war, the library of the [Oriental Cloud?] in London was destroyed; their friend was asked to rebuild it when Ferguson’s father retired from being governor of Burma, he came back and thought he should realize as many of his assets as he could for cash; took his full-dress uniform to Moss Bluff’s and they said it was not very often that they get requests for the full-dress uniform for the governor of Burma and, therefore, could not offer him very much for it; he took the money they offered him and went home two months later, an envelope with the royal household seal came, saying her majesty commanded him to attend an occasion of him handing over his duties as the governor of Burma; he went back to the store, only to have to pay the same amount he sold the dress for in order to hire it out Ferguson was there for a long time; he stayed on in Pakistan, then to West Africa when he went back to India as a soldier, the ships were very crowded because there was a crisis, but they were not crowded like ships in war; it was an anchor line that had been converted to a troop ship for that particular crisis the boat was not a good troop ship because of the uncomfortable accommodations; they had to develop different schemes to get air down into the lower decks the troops were not allowed to drink with the exception of a limited amount of beer; they had to sleep in hammocks; space was very short; spent all their time playing “housey, housey” otherwise known as bingo in those days, you always went by troop ship; there was always a certain number that belonged to the troop ship; the ship’s padre pointed out everything on their journey it was very enjoyable, but also very dramatic when approaching India by sea from the West; when coming from Calcutta, you did not see much until you arrived because it was all land coming into Bombay, you would see a line of hills trains in India were not of high value in those days because they moved very slowly; however, it allowed you the time to see the country one’s first journey was magnificent because the sun was setting in the west and you saw it lighting the Western Ghats as it set; Edge remembers sitting the entrance of the door, which was open, to admire the scenery with his legs hanging out of the train arrived in the moonlight, which was very bright in India one of the great things about India is that you received responsibilities very early, which was one of the attractions of the army; the first priority from day one was to learn the language you were required to take two tests to check your ability to understand the language: the low test and the high test; you received an incentive after each test you passed; after the high test, you were considered to have enough understanding; for Edge, passing of the high test was mandatory before he could take command even the women had to learn the language, because you missed too much if you did not Edge would always say that learning a new language is very tedious work and the test of a good moonshee was that he did not fall asleep at the same moment that you did children seemed to pick up the language quicker than the adults; they learned their nursery rhymes in the language Oruro was the language you learned; it was written the wrong way (right to left) if a regiment was made mostly of Hindus, you learned Hindi, which went from left to right; most officers learned Oruro, which was read the opposite way sappers were complicated because, at the time, there were no purely Indian engineering units; there were three corps of sappers and all the troops were Indians while all the officers were British when they began to Indianize the Indian Army, they sent a certain number of Indians; there were two schools that trained officers the responsibility of defense was once broken down into two divisions: the Board of Ordinance, which ran one department, and the Commander and Chief, who ran everything else

the Board of Ordinance dealt with such things as explosives, guns, bridges, roads, etc.

after certain training regiment, the top people became sappers and the rest became gunners; o no one preferred to be gunners, but you generally had to pass fairly high in order to become a sapper after training, you could apply to various postings; if you applied for India, you would receive British pay and be a British servant, but the unity was the Indian army looking at pictures they had a drawing room, bedroom, and bathroom; there was a brick floor and fireplace in the main room; each tent was a different room; there were brick standings, so you could pass from one tent to another and they were all attached when Edge was on the frontier, he was in the [?] Operation at the beginning of the war; it was name for the group of people that were becoming a problem discuss some of their pictures; discuss the different people in them Edge’s wife was not born in India; her father was born in Burma, along with the rest of his family in her father’s time, every regiment had one battalion abroad, like Egypt, China, or India, and one battalion in Britain practically anyone who had served time had been to India; the funny thing was that so much of the Hindustani was in the troops language; talk about the different Hindustani words and what they meant; they don’t speak Hindustani much anymore because of the times

she was in India because her father was stationed there; she went home and never went out with her parents again she tried to learn Arabic when she was in Aden, now South Yemen; had lived in the desert while in Aden in grass huts; she helped in some of the medical facilities on the lines in 1935, she rode with the Poona hunt when she was out there with her father; it was a big part of social life when it was in season, which lasted from June to about September; the governor would come up from Bombay and everything started then with dances and receptions

there was not a large number of unmarried girls; if you had an unmarried daughter that was around marriage age, you were asked to all the social events at the governor’s house the girls that came out from home for the season were known as the fishing fleet; all the men were suffering from frustration due to the lack of females; they would come out, stay a while, then go back home without husbands when you came out, it was common undertaking for the girls to be married within a week; Edge once had to sign a form saying he would undertake having his sister married within a week, and if she was not, she would be sent back home you were not allowed to be a “floating female” with no visible signs of support they knew nothing about Mrs. Simpson stuff; they were not even allowed to see some movies the King died while they were in India; she remembers how awful it was having to wear black in the heat; it was the last half of January there is a graveyard in [Arden?] that is full of the corpses of the company that took Aden for the East India Company one of her tasks in India was collecting cemetery lists; the headstones were often very sad; the cemeteries were scattered throughout the country the Arabs were using the cemetery in Aden as a latrine; when she returned home, she wrote to the governor, who was glad that someone else had taken a notice, and said he would do what he could to correct the mess talk about the book Two Monsoons in Poona at the end of the season was the cold, and all the soldiers and officers went into camp, leaving no one but the sick; in the cinema, which was a very popular place to go, was row and rows of “abandoned women” one of the women shared her home with another abandoned wife; Edge’s parents lived in a haunted house; they all, independently, saw a ghost resembling a man with a striped blazer walking through the wall one of the children they knew would always talk about the really nice black man that would come and talk to her, he was a ghost; children would take ghosts very normally if you believed in things like ghosts, the best place to see them was the areas that played a specific role in the mutiny in a little hill station about seven miles outside of Shimla produced a man . . .

relics are very respected because India loves its past; they have tried to get rid of the Queen Victoria statues, but they cannot because the locals will not let them Anna Owens’s from “The King and I”, husband is supposedly buried at the Garrison Church in Poona when she went to the church, she and her mother were amazed at young ages of the deceased; there were girls that were dying during child birth or soon after their babies died India had become much more hygienic by the time they arrived; Egypt was far more unhealthy you caught all kinds of things in Egypt; you could not even scratch yourself without getting some sort of infection or disease they do not remember getting sick at all in India the cold weather was very enjoyable and you did not mind being outside; the hot weather was terrible there were always a certain number of suicides in the rainy season they would sometimes get twelve inches of rain in one weekend, and everything would steam and become mildewed; servant would hang all of you leather possessions around the charcoal fireplace because it would have green mold everything would become moldy very fast; if you did not use your riding boots on Saturday or Sunday, they would be full of mold on Monday terrible insects everything seems so much nicer in retrospect; one would say it really is not as nice as you think; for most people, it was nice Edge went back for a short time in 1968; got stomach flu; all hotels in India are indescribable now she never remembers loathing India, nor for Egypt the urban areas are much bigger now; out in the country, everything is still the same; there are noticeably more people in the country now though Edge noticed that the educated Indian woman was much more liberated; women were going to cocktails on his visit in 1968, which was unheard of the time before [Parses?] took the name of their trade; gives examples [cotwallas?] were always trying to get an English husband; they would go to the races wearing either strong colors or pale colors, which were very beautiful; they would group together, a mother and two others; otherwise known as the “three graces” Edge thought that pure Indians, on the whole, were very beautiful; Parses were more Persian, but not pure Persian they all owned mongooses; some were not interested in killing snakes Edge owned a cat that would kill the snakes if you were bitten by a krait and received a full dose, you were expected to live for fifteen minutes; it has an antidote now watched a cobra being charmed out of some type of enclosing; snake charming actually does work; snake charmer would come to the compound with his flute and charm the snakes out of the houses snake charmers never killed the snakes because they were essential for their jobs; would carry the snakes around in baskets and make them perform around your bungalow was gravel; they would build snake-proof runways outside for your bathrooms cobras were considered to be the sociable snakes and still are; they liked to give you company Nanny got into bed one night, only to realize there was a cobra in there with her; she laid there until the cobra found itself out Nanny was subject to sleep walking ceilings were burlap-like, stretched very tightly and white washed; one the first night of the monsoon, you have to go around with cans and buckets trying to catch the dripping water; you could see the footprints of whatever had walked across the ceiling the mongoose would sleep on the ceiling and come down in the evenings; she would go crazy for a piece of chocolate; she would hide under the side board and scare the servants on their way to serve the food; was not interested in snakes because she was so well fed a mongoose looks like a large, grey weasel; very intelligent servants were not too keen on idea of mongoose constantly biting them on their heels 217 talk about snakes 227 Edge had deer as a child; it wondered around the garden; it was always best to not catch and tame a wild animal 238 in the mountains, there was always a panther scare 246 the escorts that were meant to be protection from the panthers disappeared when a black shape jumped from behind a wall, it was her dog 254 in [Peranda?], they were instructed not to go on certain paths because of the increased risks of running into a panther 263 getting back to Nanny sleepwalking; they woke in camp one morning and Nanny could only find one of her slippers. They went down to the river where they normally went and found the other slipper underneath a rock. Nanny had gone to kill the tiger that was known to be in that area to protect them 291 one of the servants used to have a baby panther; during the monsoon, the panther would hide in the tall grass and stalk you as you walked; it would play with the dogs; they were forced to get rid of it after it clawed the face of a sergeant’s greyhound 313 it is said that you cannot trust a panther 322 talk about women being given guns, sometimes by strangers 361 India was the safest place you could be; no one ever locked their doors 387 Indians were very honest people 390 during the early part of the war, Edge was walking towards his office one morning when he heard a man running up behind him; the man was running to return Edge’s wallet after it had fell out of his pocket; there were 200 rupees in his wallet 421 Spanish were the same way; some of their friends had went into Spain, and after switching drivers, realized they had lost their wallet with everything in it; to drop your wallet was a misfortune and you were able to get it back; however, if you left your wallet and locked the door, it would have been stolen 434 Indian standards of honesty were different 435 Edge’s bearer would take the loose change Edge would put on the table when he would go to change clothes; the bearer would hide the change under a handkerchief to avoid it being stolen; after a few days of leaving change on the counter, he would pull it out of his pocket and tell Edge to be more careful; at the third stage, the bearer would tell Edge that India was full of dishonest people and to be very careful 486 You would ask your cook to do all the shopping for you; one man’s long-time servant was adding charges to the bills in order to make more money. When confronted, the man told the servant to estimate how much money the servant would make and the man would increase his pay by that much. As the weeks progressed, the servant became more and more sad. When the man asked what was wrong, the servant asked for a decrease in pay because it was not fun and there was no more interest.
531 talk about the one Indian that they watched coming home from a bazaar with the supplies to make chokers and then sell them 546 everyone’s honesty has a certain level 581 talk about someone’s boyfriend, who is old enough to be her father 609 talk about the channel BBC
