Biographical/Historical Note

The Montmorency family was a prosperous line of nobility in France before the French Revolution. During the uprising, the family lost their estate and was forced to flee to Haiti. Honoré's father and his uncle were killed when Haitian freedmen and slaves began the insurrection that would lead to Haitian independence. Honoré and his siblings were lifted into a barrel by the family nurse and smuggled into America aboard a ship.

Once in America, Honoré's sister, Victoria was adopted by a French noble, and returned to Paris. Honoré and his brother were put in the charge of Charles Carroll, who educated them and became their guardian.

The brothers eventually moved to Louisiana, then to Mississippi, where Honoré opened a store, and his remaining brother Emile became a doctor of some fame. The brothers eventually returned to Louisiana and became cotton planters in Milliken's Bend, where they remained the rest of their lives.

Honoré married and had many children, some of whom wrote letters contained in this collection. Anne Morancy, one of Honoré's daughters, married into the Jackson family, who were prosperous planters, while Columba, another daughter, became a nun.

Scope and Content Note

The Morancy family was a family of planters of Milliken's Bend in East Carroll Parish. The papers in the collection consist of family letters and related items concerning social life, the Catholic Church, education, and economics in northeast Louisiana and Kentucky.

Confederate civilian letters describe the hardships of life, mention currency problems, the disappearance of necessities from the market, declining value of slaves, and dangers from guerillas. Letters during the Reconstruction period are concerned with the relocation of refugees, political unrest, and rule of martial law in Arkansas.

The family letters, dating from 1841 through 1895, describe in detail Catholic lay life; relationships with clergy, Catholic schools, education and student life; and spiritual activities.

Included are land records (1780-1798) of claims made by Edmund Hawkins and other members of his family to sections of land in Kentucky. The records include claims, lists, and surveys of their holdings.
